HIST 250 - LIVES, MEMORIES, STORIES, HISTORY

This course will introduce students to the practice of oral history, one of the most important means of preserving and celebrating the memory and history of individuals too often overlooked in the history books. Once considered a problematic, unreliable means of documenting the past, oral histories are now used extensively by those in the field of history. Moreover, scholars rely on oral history to give voice to those whose lives are not represented in conventional archives, including women, African Americans, rural dwellers, laborers, immigrants, colonized people, gays and lesbians, and other disadvantaged groups. The goal of the course is to help students in the preparation, execution, evaluation and interpretation of oral history interviews.
