HON 300 - HONORS HUMANITIES SEMINAR
This seminar is a unique opportunity to explore the humanities at one of America’s foremost research libraries. Taught at the Newberry Library by a team of instructors from sponsoring universities, this seminar is offered every year from January to May. Seminar topics change each year, related to the Newberry’s holdings. Students pursue common assignments and individual research projects. Five Roosevelt students are selected to join students from neighboring institutions.
Credits: 6
Attributes: Honors Program
Course Notes: Class takes place at Newbery Library, 60 West Walton. All, interested RU students are encouraged to apply, not, restricted to Honors students. Admission by application, to Prof. Priscilla Archibald (parchibald@roosevelt.edu)

HON 311 - HONORS PRO-SEMINAR
This seminar focuses on developing Honors’ students’ academic and professional skills for continued success and leadership development in the Honors Program and at Roosevelt. As a developmental course intended to serve students who are sophomores through seniors, its content may vary from term to term, and attend to ongoing learning and expectations of Honors students. It expects students to evaluate and revise, based on course learning, the scope and sequence of their current Honors experiences as it relates to academic and professional excellence, and to set appropriate goals as a result.

HON 312 - HONORS BOOK COLLOQUIUM
This colloquium is a group book study, revolving around a main common text that we will analyze and discuss with rigor and attention to the text's relevance to students’ educational paths and our contemporary world. The purpose of this colloquium is for Honors students to develop, practice, and master habits of seminar leadership; collegial dialogue with peers, faculty, and guests; textual analysis and application; and engagement with current civic, cultural, and social issues through the lens of a text. Honors Book Colloquium is designed to help Honors students become skilled junior scholars prepared for the rigors of Honors coursework, graduate school, and careers.
