

SOCIOLOGY (SOC)

SOC 101 - INTRODUCTION TO SOCIOLOGY

Basic theories and concepts of sociology; culture; roles and norms; personality and group; forms of social organization; class, caste, and race; community; social institutions; collective behavior; social change.

Credits: 3

Attributes: Social Science

SOC 123 - SPORTS AND SOCIETY

Sociological perspective on the socio-cultural characteristics of sport. Examination of the cultural, historical, economic, political, and structural factors (e.g., race, class, gender) that form salient aspects of today's sport activities at various levels. Focus on the characteristics of sports and how they reflect and impact the social climate of society.

Credits: 3

Course Notes: No additional credit granted for SOC 223

SOC 210 - CONTEMPORARY SOCIAL ISSUES

This course focuses on contemporary issues from a sociological perspective. The course will focus on the ways social inequalities (such as class and power relations, race, gender, and global inequality) are produced and reproduced overtime. The course will also examine specific institutional problems which may include the environment, poverty, corporate power, urban and suburban places, the workplace, education, healthcare, crime and justice, and national security. The class will also reflect on the prospects for social justice and progressive policy solutions.

Credits: 3

Attributes: Social Justice Studies, Social Science

Prerequisites: SOC 101

SOC 211 - CONTEMPORARY GLOBAL ISSUES

This course analyzes contemporary global issues through a sociological lens. Its core purpose is to explore the context, structural and cultural causes and consequences of such global issues as colonialism, imperialism, privilege, consumption, corporate power, economic development, debt crisis, labor practices, oppression, neocolonialism, state violence, and militarism.

Credits: 3

Attributes: International Studies, Non-western Culture, Social Science

Prerequisites: SOC 101

Course Notes: Fulfills SOC 210 requirement.

SOC 212 - CONTEMPORARY URBAN ISSUES

This course examines contemporary urban issues from a sociological perspective. The course will focus on the historical forces that shape current racial and class segregation. The class will then examine place-based forms of urban inequality stemming from economic development trends, workplace transformation, and gentrification; urban problems involving schools, the criminal justice system, immigration reform and the suburban crisis; the role of cities in Climate Change; and progressive solutions to urban problems.

Credits: 3

Attributes: Social Justice Studies, Social Science

Prerequisites: SOC 101

SOC 214 - SOCIOLOGY OF CHICAGO NEIGHBORHOODS

Students in this class will explore Chicago's neighborhoods. We will examine a wide array of social forces that shape neighborhoods, such as: downtown development, urban sustainability and green development, segregation, ethnic enclaves, gayborhoods, gentrification, public housing, public transportation, public schools, policing, and community organizations. Each topic will be paired with a field trip to a specific neighborhood that best exemplifies the topic under examination. Students should take away an in-depth understanding of the social forces that shape neighborhoods in Chicago and a deeper understanding of neighborhoods as a lived experience.

Credits: 3

Attributes: Social Justice Studies, Social Science

SOC 215 - THE FAMILY

Development of families; variations in family patterns in various cultures; role relationships within families; family influences in personality development; mate selection; parent-child relations; family disorganization and reorganization.

Credits: 3

Attributes: Social Science, Women Gender Studies

SOC 220 - HEALTH, ILLNESS, & INEQUALITY

This course explores how the on-going COVID-19 pandemic, capitalism, consumer culture, and the ecological destruction of our planet affects our very well-being. We examine these complex issues by first examining the social determinants of health: the ways that race, class, gender, and environment intersect to produce disease and disability for some and wellness for others. Second, we will look at the social construction of illness, asking how cultural conceptions of illness can explain a variety of health outcomes across different cultural contexts. Finally, we will explore the political economy of medicine: looking at how our health care system, while acting as an institution of public health and healing, also serves as a tool for social control and an engine for capitalist accumulation.

Credits: 3

Prerequisites: SOC 101 or ENG 101

SOC 223 - SPORTS AND SOCIETY

Sociological perspective on the socio-cultural characteristics of sport. Examination of the cultural, historical, economic, political, and structural factors (e.g., race, class, gender) that form salient aspects of today's sport activities at various levels. Focus on the characteristics of sports and how they reflect and impact the social climate of society. (3)

Credits: 3

Attributes: Social Science, Women Gender Studies

SOC 225 - MCDONALDIZATION OF SOCIETY

George Ritzer's McDonaldization thesis holds that the world is increasingly organized around principles of efficiency, calculability, predictability, and control through nonhuman technology. Although in many ways a restatement of Max Weber's classic analysis of bureaucracy, Ritzer's thesis has been extended in very original ways by others into the analysis of chain stores, restaurants, theme parks, sex work, the operation of police, courts and prisons, and universities. This course will be focused on the McDondaldization thesis, its extensions and its critics.

Credits: 3

Attributes: International Studies, Non-western Culture, Social Science

SOC 260 - SOCIETY AND THE INDIVIDUAL

This course explores the relationship between society and the individual self, particularly how in the ebb and flow of everyday life, we both consciously and unconsciously, make and remake both social structures and ourselves through social interaction. Our goal is to gain a better understanding of when we are acting as social agents, conscious of our motives and ability to create social change, and when social structures are acting upon us via socialization, social expectation, norms, sanctions, stereotypes, etc. to reinforce the existing social order. Topics include social perception; social influence and persuasion; institutionalized classism, racism, sexism, ageism, and ableism; intimacy and close relationships, emotions and emotion management; and pro-social behavior.

Credits: 3

Attributes: Social Science

Prerequisites: SOC 101

SOC 261 - WRITING FOR NON-PROFITS

Writing for Nonprofits is a problem-based writing course that asks students to practice composing for community-engaged contexts, audiences, and purposes. Students will practice rhetorically sound, professional writing by partnering with a nonprofit organization and promoting their services to a larger audience. Students will also have opportunities to practice collaborative writing, as students will spend the semester working in groups to learn about the services offered by this organization and apply rhetorical concepts that can encourage people in and around Chicago to make use of the organization's resources.

Credits: 3

Prerequisites: SOC 101

SOC 270 - FOOD AND INEQUALITY

What and how we eat reveal complex relationships between individual eaters and social structures. This course focuses on food as a lens to study the productions and reproduction of social inequality. We explore problems in the food system, such as labor injustices and unequal access to food as well as recent food movements and media representations of food. Applying a sociological perspective, students will reflect on and analyze on how their own food and eating practices are culturally and socially produced.

Credits: 3

SOC 280 - TELLING SOCIOLOGICAL STORIES

Telling stories about lived experiences helps people reflect on their individual lives and communicate the socio-cultural meanings of their experiences. Based on the belief that stories matter sociologically, we examine how narrative storytelling connects the self to larger social forces and explore how storytelling can be used to influence social change.

Credits: 3

SOC 290 - THE RESEARCH PROCESS

Data-gathering techniques in the social sciences; questionnaires, interviews, participant observation, and the use of official statistics. Basic statistical procedures used to analyze and interpret data; the use of computers in research; emphasis on the preparation and writing of research reports.

Credits: 3

Attributes: Social Science

Prerequisites: SOC 101

SOC 291 - SOCIAL STATISTICS: INTRODUCTION TO PROBABILITY & STATISTICS

Elementary probability and probability distributions, random variables, expectation, and variance; binomial and normal probability distributions. Applications to estimation, confidence intervals, statistical testing of hypotheses, two-sample techniques. Correlation and least squares.

Credits: 3

Attributes: Social Science

Prerequisites: MATH 116 or MATH 121 or MATH 110 or Compass-Algebra with min score of 45

Course Notes: Math courses higher than 121 satisfy the prerequisite.

SOC 292 - ELEMENTARY STATISTICS LAB

The course incorporates collaborative learning, oral and written reports and technology. Emphasizes techniques, exploration and applications rather than derivation. All projects will use real data and conclusions are not predetermined. Topics include methods of summarizing data, statistical inference and regression.

Credits: 1

Course Notes: Must be taken concurrently with MATH 217, ECON 234, or SOC 291

SOC 300 - LIVING SOCIOLOGY: CAREER AND PERSONAL PATHWAYS

Sociologists study the social world and are often well-versed in the 'problems' of everyday life. In this course we will 'learn about' and 'engage in' creating social change. Through the planned readings and workshops students will learn theory, advocacy and activist skills, and engage in dialogue about their experiences through a sociological lens. In the end, students interested in pursuing careers informed by a sociological perspective will have tools to connect to or carve a path.

Credits: 3

Attributes: Social Science

Prerequisites: SOC 101 (may be taken concurrently)

Course Notes: Additional credit will not be given for both SOC 289, and SOC 300., No additional credit granted for SOC 300 as "SOCIOLOGY IN, ACTION.

Development of classical perspectives within sociology. Karl Marx, Max Weber, Emile Durkheim and others.

Credits: 3

Attributes: Social Science

Prerequisites: SOC 101 and 9 Credit Hours of Sociology

Course Notes: 9 semester hours in SOC or instr. consent

SOC 318 - SOCIAL MOVEMENTS AND SOCIAL CHANGE

Since the 1970s a new form of 'neoliberal' capitalism has emerged. Neoliberalism rode in on attacks against 'big government' and 'special interests', accompanied by promises of economic growth and greater efficiency. In practice, neoliberalism has failed to deliver on these promises. Everywhere it has been implemented, neoliberalism has produced mounting inequality and increasing insecurity for the vast majority. Rather than reducing the size of government, neoliberalism has shifted the weight of government from social programs benefitting poor and working people to massive subsidies for the wealthy, the military-industrial complex, and the prison-industrial complex. This course examines the rise of neoliberalism, its contradictions, and its current crisis. In response to the constant refrain that 'there is no alternative', the course also explores alternatives to neoliberalism in the form of economic democracy and worker self-managed enterprises.

Prerequisites: SOC 101 (may be taken concurrently) and 3 Credit Hours of Sociology

Course Notes: or instructor consent.

SOC 355 - CLIMATE CHANGE, CITIES, AND JUSTICE

Climate Change is fundamentally transforming how humans live. U.S. cities must adopt policies to reduce carbon emissions and adapt to changing climate conditions. This course examines current and future impacts of climate change on cities, focusing on extreme weather events like wildfires, floods, hurricanes, rising sea levels, urban heat waves, and water shortages. We analyze how these extreme weather events amplify environmental injustices and lead to the mass displacement of people, creating a new type of immigrant – the climate refugee. We also explore solutions that Resilient Cities across the globe have already implemented in their infrastructure and services to both mitigate and adapt to climate change, accommodate growing climate refugee populations, and enhance environmental equity. These include sustainable building and urban environmental design, affordable housing, low-carbon public transportation systems, and accessible green spaces.
