JOURNALISM, MINOR

The Journalism minor focuses on hands-on professional courses in which students develop and practice the research, writing, and reporting skills common to all journalistic fields. Students in the minor complete five lab-based courses working with state-of-the-art technology to report stories across multiple media forms, including online, print, and broadcast.

The Journalism minor is a good option for students who choose to major in fields such as political science, history, economics, or the sciences.
